Internet film sites showcase new talent

Movie theaters and cable TV aren't the only places people can watch movies anymore. Internet websites featuring original films are becoming increasingly popular, especially as more people are connecting to the Internet via high-speed broadband connections.

Websites such as atomfilms.com, ifilm.com and inetfilm.com (see windows) feature an outlet for independent film makers to showcase their work to the world. The short films range in subject from parodies to action to romance and everything in between.

The sites provide links to download the appropriate software to view the films, typically either either in Windows Media, Quicktime or RealVideo format.
